

A US Congressional Committee is [] whether to bring formal impeachment charges [] President Trump. He's accused of soliciting interference [] Ukraine to help his 2020 re-election [] as well as witness intimidation, and obstructing justice and Congress. Republican members of the committee [] there is no new evidence and [] the Democrats just don't like the President. Our [] America correspondent, Nick Bryant, is with us now. What have [] heard today? The impeachment inquiry today [] more like a [] of history lectures, with professors appearing on Capitol [] to explain what America's Founding Fathers [] by high cream and misdemeanours, the constitutional standard to impeach or [] a president. But we have had weeks of televised [] now and across America they just have not [] public opinion, they have not moved the [] before. Nor has a [] Republican lawmaker come out and said Donald Trump [] be impeached. So I think what will happen from [] is that before Christmas the Democrats will use their House of Representatives [] to impeach Donald Trump, then after Christmas, in the New Year, we get the [] of Donald Trump in the US Senate, where the Republicans have the [] to deliver a not guilty verdict. STUDIO: Many thanks, Nick Bryant.